The more than $1 billion in funding, software, services and training, etc. should be accepted or the whole thing should be dropped and not brought up any more. Microsoft has been more than fair during this whole process and is still trying to create new and innovated products even when the competition is trying to win via the court of law and not with great software products. If the software competition to Microsoft would put as much effort into their software as they do into trying to bring Microsoft down in a court of law, maybe they would have software that consumers want more than they would want software from Microsoft.
Thank you,
